

On the distribution of Hyla evittata Miller.

In my recent paper on the Batrachians and Reptiles of the District of Columbia I gave the known range of Hyla evittata as extending along the Potomac River from Four Mile Run to Little Hunting Creek, a distance of about fifteen miles. I have since learned from Mr. A. H. Howell that he has several times heard its unmistakable note in the neighborhood of Anolostan Island; and Mr. G. S. Miller, Jr., has taken a specimen (No. 29,621, U. S. National Museum) at Quantico, some fifteen miles below Mount Vernon.

In early August of the present summer I secured one specimen and saw another in a small fresh water pool along the York River, about half a mile above Yorktown, Va.,

Mr. Howell's record probably represents the northern limit of the range of this species as I have repeatedly searched in favorable localities in the neighborhood of Plummer's Island and Great Falls without seeing or hearing it. I might also add that a careful search in a Nymphæa swamp in Accomack County, Va., failed to reveal it.—W. P. Hay.
